Giulio Tononi: 2011 Allen Institute for Brain Science Symposium

TMS-EEG evoked responses increase with wakefulness and decrease with sleep

Giulio Tononi, University of Wisconsin, Madison "Sleep function and synaptic homeostasis"

We spend a third of our lives in sleep, but we have no idea why. This, according to Dr. Tononi, "is most embarrassing for neuroscience." Slow sleep oscillations -- traveling waves -- propagate throughout the brain on the superhighways of the connectome, then they spread out through the rest of the brain; this happens a thousand times every night, but we have no idea why. Dr. Tononi proposed a theory for why we sleep, which basically states that "sleep is the price we pay for synaptic plasticity." That is, sleep exists as a sort of "offline" reset, or release valve, to renormalize synaptic strength that steadily increases during wakefulness. Dubbed the Synaptic Homeostasis
